Goals / remit*Goals / remit of the organisation:

Change the way you deliver instruction.

First and foremost, students need more effective ways to learn. It's clear to anyone paying attention that personalized learning is what they want and soon will expect. Everyone learns differently. Higher education can no longer rely on "warehouse learning," cramming hundreds of students in a room, employing only one teaching style and expecting it to work for everyone.

More students thrive in problem-solving environments in which they can learn and operate according to their own individual style. Online instruction augments classroom learning and offers vast new opportunities to deliver personalized learning.

Focus on post-graduation.

Students need an education grounded in the real work they'll be doing after graduation. As an industry, we need to do a better job of listening to the people and companies who will employ our students, whose success depends on our ability to shut our mouths and open our ears. When we engage corporations more deeply, partnerships can be about more than fundraising and naming rights. They lead to more tailored, targeted programs that address the most high-priority needs for employers—and jobs for our students.
